

Ann Macias
President
ADV Board of Directors

The reputation of ADV is stellar ... phenomenal. As a board member, there isn't ever any need for a sales pitch. When I ask four or five of my friends to buy $1,000 tables at a luncheon to benefit ADV, they think that's a good idea. It's just because of their overall reputation. People are aware of us and it's all favorable.

And Casa de Paz ... You can't walk in there and not be blown away. The level of service they provide is amazing.

This organization is over the top. It's our leadership and our staff. There is nothing else like us.

ADV is so well organized that, when you are in the middle of a personal disaster, it truly is just a phone call. Anyone and everyone who needs to get into the mix is there. There's not a lot of red tape. It's not difficult. You don't have to know someone. You just need to be in that horrible situation of domestic violence.

It's the most loving and compassionate agency. We're not just dealing with housing the individual and feeding her and her children. We're providing medical services, dental services, psychological services, any type of thing you can imagine. If they need help finding employment, we're providing that service, too. It's just all-inclusive.

I don't know how anybody could do it any better.
